

Transfer board user guide

What is a transfer board?

A transfer board is a piece of equipment that helps a person move or 'transfer' from one surface to another; for example, from bed to chair or from wheelchair to toilet. The boards come in a variety of shapes, colours and sizes. They are also sometimes known as banana boards and slide boards.

How to use a transfer board

Only use a transfer board if you have carried out a risk assessment and taken independent advice, ie from your Support Worker, Social Worker or Occupational Health Therapist.

Step by step guide – transferring from bed to wheelchair:

1.

- Ask someone to move the wheelchair close to the side of the bed.
- Remove the wheelchair's arm rest and footplate on the side closest to the bed.
- Apply brakes to the wheelchair.
- Sit on the edge of the bed with your feet as close to the floor as possible.

2.

- Lean to one side, away from the direction you are about to move in.
- Slide one fourth of the board under your bottom and sit on it.

3.

- The rest of the board should be positioned surface you are moving towards
- Keep your hands flat on board.

4.

- Slide your bottom along the board over the pushing with your hands in short movements. (for example, the wheelchair).

5.

6.

- When you are closer to the wheelchair hold onto the armrest.
- Remove the transfer board by leaning to the side.

- Replace armrest and foot plates.

Tips for safe transfer

- Wear trousers to avoid catching any skin on the board when moving.
- Keep hands flat on the board to avoid catching your fingers underneath (as shown below).

Tips for helping a child to transfer:

- If help is required, squat down in front of your child, supporting their hips as you guide them along the board. This helps your child feel safe. If needed, help your child to move along the board in short shuffle movements.
- Encourage your child to do as much as possible. Take your time and talk to one another when moving.
Communication is key!
